V. 2. Citations and Explanations:

Claims 1-10 Hamada (U.S. 2004/0166897) an inventive step under PCT Article 33(3) as being obvious Hamada (U.S. 2004/0166897) over in view of Rune et al. (U.S. Patent No. 2004/0167988 A1).

In the claims, 1-6, Hamadata transmitting beacon signals at beacon intervals, each beacon containing a beacon information set (see page 2, [0029]);

However, Hamadata is silent to disclosing transmitting gratuitous probe response signal (supplementary beacons) at a gratuitous probe response interval containing a subset of the beacon information, the gratuitous probe response signals transmitted at a gratuitous probe response interval, the gratuitous probe response interval being shorter than the beacon interval such that a plurality of gratuitous probe response signals are transmitted between successive beacon signals, and containing a subset of the beacon information.

Rune et al. discloses transmitting gratuitous probe response signal (supplementary beacons) at a gratuitous probe response interval containing a subset of the beacon information, the gratuitous probe response signals transmitted at a gratuitous probe response interval, the gratuitous probe response interval being shorter than the beacon interval such that a plurality of gratuitous probe response signals are transmitted between successive beacon signals, and containing a subset of the beacon information (see page 18, [0184], page 20, [0207]).

Bothe Hamadata and Rune disclose Ethernet LAN. Rune recognizes transmitting gratuitous probe response signal (supplementary beacons) at a gratuitous probe response interval containing a subset of the beacon information, the gratuitous probe response signals transmitted at a gratuitous probe response interval, the gratuitous probe response interval being shorter than the beacon interval such that a plurality of gratuitous probe response signals are transmitted between successive beacon signals, and containing a subset of the beacon information. To modify the system of Hamada with the teaching of Rune to transmit gratuitous probe response signal (supplementary beacons) at a gratuitous probe response interval containing a subset of the beacon information, the gratuitous probe response signals transmitted at a gratuitous probe response interval, the gratuitous probe response interval being shorter than the beacon interval such that a plurality of gratuitous probe response signals are transmitted between successive beacon signals, and containing a subset of the beacon information would not involve an inventive step.
